VA. FOREST SERVICE NOT TO GRAZE CATTLE IN WOODED AREAS

The common practice of cattle grazing in farm woodlands is seen in every section. Sufficient experiments have been conducted to prove that cattle cannot thrive in wooded areas. And when you consider the extensive damage that is done to the land itself, where does the profit come from? Most landowners give no thought to their timber except when in need of a little ready cash. How much more cash could the owner have received if the area had been fenced off from cattle? When all facts are considered, it probably would have been more profitable for the owner to have cleared his unfenced woodland for improved pasture, than to have grazed it.

Just what are the effects of grazing on the timber, vegetative soil, and water resources of woodlands? Suppose you take a little time and walk through your timbered areas. Make comparisons of the grazed and the ungrazed portions Obviously in the grazed area you will note the absence of ground cover in the form of reproduction, bushes, vines and other kinds of vegetative growth. Note the soil that is exposed and compacted by the trampling of cattle hoves as they search for food.

Not readily seen but nevertheless taking place is the reduction in growth rates of the larger trees. Since most of the feeding roots of trees are in the upper six inches of the soil, many roots are killed either by the compaction of the soil itself or by being exposed as the bare soil washes away.

Let us consider a grazed and ungrazed woodland during a rainstorm—you will note that the storm water flows to the stream directly over the land surface, where in the ungrazed, undisturbed forest floor, the storm water is absorbed, with little or no surface runoff. Erosion is the end result of excessive surface runoff. The ability of the compacted soil to absorb water is greatly reduced.

If you are to realize the greatest financial return from each portion of your farms, each area should be managed for the crop the land is best able to produce. In other words cattle should be kept out of the woods.

SEED SWEET SUDAN UP TO AUGUST 10

Farmers in Eastern Virginia can still give their livestock feeding program a boost by seeding sweet sudan grass.

John F. Shoulders, asociate agronomist at VPI, says sudan grass can be seeded in Eastern Virginia up until August 10. Fertilize well. Broadcast and disc in 600 to 800 pounds per acre of a 8-8-8 or 10-10-10 fertilizer. Prepare a good seedbed, and seed at the rate of 20 to 30 pounds per acre. Best results are usually obtained by drilling.

A grain drill set to sow two pecks of wheat will seed about 20 to 25 pounds of sudan grass pep acre. If a drill is not available, the seed may be broadcast and harrowed in.

Sweet sudan grass not needed for grazing may be used for silage or hay. Cut as the first heads appear for highest quality forage.

While there seems to be only slight danger of prussic acid poisoning from sudan grass under Virginia conditions, it is best to delay grazing until the grass is 18 inches high to avoid this danger. Frosted or frozen sudan grass should not be grazed. However, it is usually safe to use frosted sudan grass for silage or hay if cut immediately after the frost.

home, been made to feel so much "at home." Ever since, we have had the warmest feeling when some one just mentions: Louisiana!

Which brings to mind the perils of being known as one who knows the ropes about traveling. Yesterday the telephone rings and someone wants to know where to eat when they get to New Orleans. Oysters a la Rockefeller at Antoine's.

Another vacationist wants to know how to get from Asheville to Gatlinsburg. Watch for those camera shots of bears on the road from old Cherokee! And we recommend the Bel Air in Gatlinsburg.... if you can make it early enough in the afternoon to get a reservation.

The man who makes up the news columns tells me that we have lots of open space for the final press run, so I may as well ramble along and forget about a front page column and go as far as anything pops into mind.

And in such a vein I think of all the fine people in Appomattox who are on vacation this week. Biggest mass vacation we have ever had. It may hurt the record at the Bloodmobile visitation unless others come in as volunteers. Anyway, I fell to wondering, when lots of folks had an annual vacation of one big week —how far could they get from home? One concern out in the Middle West with some 10,000 employees, and a big one week vacation, puts stickers on windshields, with the big letters "Hello Honey" on them on cars of employees, and offers a prize for those who chance to see another of the "Hello Honey" stickers the longest distance from home during one big week. Amazing how many some of them were. How far from Appomattox did you get in your annual vacation?

Air Conditioner Helps Hay Fever

Thousands of hay fever victims will buy room air conditioners this year for relief during the coming season, air-conditioning manufacturers estimate. It is estimated by pollen counters that there are 2,000,000 hay fever victims in the United States afflicted with hay fever and asthma (more or less severe cases). In addition, approximately 10,000 new victims are added each year.

A fortunate few of those hay fever sufferers are able to escape to the mountains or seashore havens. The best bet for relief for those who must stay at home is relief through air conditioning.

A modern room air conditioner substantially reduces the pollen count, to decrease the misery and distress, and also brings relief the victim can get from sleep which builds up the body resistance to the pollen and other irritants when the body is awake. The air circulate in the pollenated air during the day.

Another way of purifying the air besides filtering is in the electrical purifying process. Pollen is removed from the moisture which is eventually dissipated as a mist into the outside air.

BARON MICHELE LEONE WRESTLES IN LYNCHBURG

Lynchburg, Va.- Baron Michele Leone, one of national television's most popular professional wrestlers and holder of the world's junior heavyweight championship, makes his Lynchburg debut on Thursday night when he goes against the Southern heavyweight champion Freddie Blassie, of St. Louis, Mo., in the feature of a three-event card.

The titles of both Blassie and Leone will be on the line in the best of three falls match, which has a 60-minute time limit. Proceedings at Lynchburg City Armory are scheduled to start at 8:30 o'clock.

Despite the fact that this is his first appearance in Lynchburg, Leone is well known to Lynchburg fans for his numerous appearances on the "Wrestling from Hollywood" programs throughout the past few years. His suave manner and flashing smile have on many occasions belied near villainous depths he has approached in winning the majority of his appearances.

Actually, Leone hails from Abruzzi, Italy. He is 5-9 in height, but sports a 50-inch chest. He attributes his excellently developed body to strict and intensive training and a rather unusual diet—nothing but green vegetables and raw meat. As for hair—a touchy point with the Baron—he insists he wears it long strictly in the interest of the family tradition.

Indicative of the Baron's popularity are the facts that over 26,000 fans paid $103,000 to watch him as he staged an unsuccessful attempt to capture the heavyweight crown from Lou Thesz in 1952.

Subscription rate: $2.00 a year payable in advance.
